GENEVIEVE,

"Ah! said he, I would pay very dear for the other fragment of that medallion! Between us be it said, I have sought for it more than once, on the toilettes and in the jewel-cases of our duchesses."

"How Prince, do you suppose ——?"

"What would you?" In my position, I have nothing better to do. But give me the chain again; for, since I think of it, I have just now acted very indiscreetly. Suppose that this woman, some day, appertains to one of you! The hazard is very great; "who knows?"

This really extraordinary story, caused an explosion of mirth in which the Prince, himself, took part. The mysterious heroine, for a long time, furnished food for the conversation, and was the subject of a variety of suppositions and conjectures, each more singular than the other.

"Come, Patrolle," suddenly said a guest, "tell us something. In your character of Doctor, you must have had some curious adventures."

"Me!" answered the Doctor; "I never had any, Suppose you—"

"Oh! ho!" exclaimed the whole company; "he wishes to play the discreet; but he must speak, or tell the reason why not."

"Well, I will tell you why not," replied Patrolle, with great dignity. "It is because nothing worthy of your attention, has ever happened to me."

At this moment, some one rapped violently at the door. The deafening noise which followed the recital of the Prince, had, doubtless, prevented them from hearing the knocking at first. One of the young noblemen opened the door, and a servant, respectfully entered the saloon.

"Sir," said he, addressing the Doctor, "there is a person below who wishes to speak with you."

"At this hour?"

It was about one o'clock in the morning.

"Sir, he says that it is upon business of importance."

"Well," said the Doctor, casting his napkin on the table, "I will go to him." Then turning to the astonished guests he said:

"Gentlemen, excuse me; it is, doubtless, some sick person in the neighborhood. I will return soon."

After the departure of master Patrolle, the demands of appetite, which had been a moment disregarded, for the interesting recital of the Prince, seemed to arouse themselves with renewed energy, and for some time, but little attention was paid to the absence of the Doctor. Still, two—three—four o'clock struck,—day was beginning to break, and master Patrolle had not yet returned. The company then, began to experience some uneasiness; many had already proposed sending the servants to look for him, when, at about half-past four, the Doctor came in, with a countenance very disordered.

"What is the matter, Doctor!" demanded the Prince, with astonishment.

"Parbleu!" replied master Patrolle, regarding his interrogator with a strange look, "I, too, have a singular adventure to recount to you."

One can easily imagine the impression which these words produced on the company. The Doctor's emotion, the manner in which he expressed himself, the circumstances even, in which he seemed to have obtained his promised narration,—in fine, every thing concurred to arouse the highest degree of interest and curiosity. They all pressed closely around him.

"As they had forewarned me," said Doctor Patrolle, "I found a person awaiting me in the ante-chamber. It was a tall, hale, grave looking man of about sixty years of age—from his dark and sober dress. I took him, at first, for a fellow physician, but his obsequious manners, and deferential tone soon undeceived me. He was evidently the steward of some wealthy household."

"Sir," said he, "there is a lady near by, who has need of your assistance."

"Very good," said I, "let us proceed."

"I went on before, and directed my course towards the street. I had scarcely crossed the sill of the door, when I perceived a carriage awaiting us. The unknown opened the door of it, and, familiarly, seated himself opposite me. The horses started off immediately, and, at the same moment, he stretched out his hand, drew the thick curtains of the carriage down, and left us in profound darkness.

"Sir," said he, "pardon this excess of precaution. It is necessary that you should be utterly ignorant of the place to which I am about to conduct you. As to the rest, fear nothing; the person who stands in need of your aid, does not wish to be seen, but she will feel, deeply, her obligations to you, and will not fail to compensate you in the most ample manner." I immediately suspected what was the matter.

"There is not," Sir," I replied, "the least need of those promises to induce me to perform my duty."

The carriage moved on for about an hour. Soon, by the sound which it produced in passing through a vaulted passage, I guessed that we had arrived at our destination. In a word, it stopped—the door was opened, and the stranger, leaping to the ground, requested me to descend. We were in a spacious court, but the darkness prevented me from distinguishing anything. My guide, taking me by the hand, led me through a labyrinth of halls and apartments, each darker than the preceding one, until we, at length, penetrated into a small chamber, feebly lighted by a single lamp. I cast a hurried glance around me. At the bottom of the room was an alcove, carefully closed by two red damask curtains, richly trimmed with gold fringe; upon and near the table, were a number of instruments, prepared beforehand, and of which I immediately recognized the use. The stranger stopped, and, pointing to the alcove, said, in a low voice:

"Sir, the patient is there. The preparations indicate sufficiently what you are to do; I will, therefore, leave you. When you have finished, you will ring the bell, and I will conduct you again to your dwelling. But be prudent, Sir, prudent and discreet."

Immediately the stranger withdrew. Approaching the alcove, I raised the curtains, and perceived a woman lying upon a bed, and evidently a prey to the most cruel sufferings. A black veil covered her face; and her fingers, cramped with pain, forcibly grasped the bed-covering. I immediately proceeded to the accouchement, and, in a few minutes after, held in my arms a new-born infant. It was a girl. During this painful operation, we did not exchange a word. The patient did not permit a single cry or groan, which might have betrayed the sound of her voice, to escape her. I rang, and the stranger reappearing, I gave to him the infant. He placed it in the bed, by its mother; then, taking me again by the hand, he re-conducted me to the carriage, brought me back, and here I am.

In finishing his story, the Doctor glanced curiously upon the listeners, in order to judge of the effect he had produced. The surprise was extreme, and manifested itself upon every countenance.

"Indeed," said the Prince, "that is a very extraordinary circumstance."

"Yes," resumed the Doctor, but what is yet more so, is that this woman is the very one whom you have been seeking for almost a year. At these words a shivering ran through the guests, and the Prince trembled violently.

"Are you certain of it?" cried he, with anguish.

I recognized, perfectly, upon the mantel-piece, the fragment of the medallion you wish to possess.

"And did you not take it?"

"Parblew! Prince, not so fast if you please!—I was known!—besides, I had not the same right which you would have had."

"At least, you will easily recognize the whereabouts?"

"That would be altogether impossible."

The Prince remained some minutes grave and thoughtful. After some moments of general silence:

"Doctor," resumed he, "God wills not that the planets should, and they do not meet; but He wills that a father may find his child; let us hope in the future."

This time the story did not produce any hilarity.—The guests, deeply impressed by the singular denouement of the orgies of the night, became calm and serious.

This broke up the party. Moreover, day had completely broken. Each one heartily shook hands with the Prince, and the Doctor was left alone to his thoughts and meditations.

Six months had passed since this memorable night, when the Doctor received the following letter, which was without signature, and of which the writing was evidently disguised:

"Sir, there is, in this world, a child which, unhappily, its mother cannot recognize at this time; and which is, at present, at the house of a man named Rolland, a gardener at Fontenay. This man picked it up, about six months ago, on the road from Orleans to Paris, where it had been exposed, with a purse containing ten thousand francs in gold. Two persons alone have been made acquainted, more or less perfectly, with the mystery of the birth of this infant.—Of these two persons, one has just died; the other is yourself. The hope is indulged that you will be generous enough to assume the task of him who is no more, in watching carefully the fate of this child, to whom, in better days, its mother has not lost the hope of giving a family and a name."

The doctor suspected immediately the source from whence the letter emanated, and experienced a joy the more vivid, in that it put him on the road to a discovery which he had believed impossible. He ran directly to the dwelling of the Prince; who, entertaining the same hopes as master Patrolle, dressed himself in haste, and started off immediately for Fontenay, in company with the doctor. The house of the gardener was indicated to them.

"My friend," said the doctor to him, "some time ago, you picked up, on the highway, an abandoned child, together with a purse containing ten thousand francs in gold?"

This question seemed to astonish the gardener exceedingly.

"It is true."

"Where is that child?" continued the doctor.

Rolland hesitated a moment befored he answered.

"Sir," said he stammeringly, "I am not at all acquainted with you. I do not know whether I ought."

"Oh! speak, speak!" said the Prince vehemently, "You have nothing to fear, and I will give you three thousand francs if you will tell me what has become of it."

In pronouncing these words, the Prince shook a well filled purse, which caused Rolland to tremble fairly with covetousness.

"Three thousand francs!" cried the gardner.

"Three thousand francs!" cried his wife. And she approached her husband with anxiety.

"Alas!" resumed Rolland with a sorrowful air, "three days ago—"

The gardener was about to proceed, but his wife did not permit him. She pushed him away slightly with her elbow, and taking up the word in his place:

"My good sir," said she, "we are very poor people; do not be angry with us."

"What do you mean?" demanded the doctor uneasily.

"We could not keep this child forever."

"Well!"

"We were nursing here at the same time, the daughter of a laborer of Saint Germain, named Joseph Poultier. But this child died during the last week. Her father came to take her away, three days ago, and we gave him in her stead, the child which we found on the high road."

"And," said the doctor disdainfully, "you have kept the ten thousand francs?"

"Oh! never mind that," exclaimed the Prince, throwing his purse to the peasantess; "thanks, my good woman, thanks; you have again rendered me happy."

The nobleman was completely drunken with joy; still there remained to him another desire to gratify, and that was to find the mother. To this end he requested the gardener to recount all the particulars relative to this mysterious event.

"One morning," said Rolland, "while returning from town, seated, as usual in my cart, I perceived at the forks of the Main and the Chatillon roads, a new-born infant lying on the grass. I dismounted, picked up the child, and returned with it to my wife. Soon we heard the noise of a horse behind us. A tall, stern looking man, aged about sixty, and dressed entirely in black, suddenly halted near our wagon, asked of us our name and residence; then, turning his bridle immediately, he went off at a gallop."

"It was the steward," said the doctor, casting towards the Prince, a meaning look.

"Without doubt," replied that one. "And since that time?"

"For a while after that, we did not see any person, but one fine morning, the same man came here. He requested to see the child, took it upon his knees, caressed it greatly, and enjoined upon us to have the greatest care taken of the poor little creature. Eight days after, he came again, then again the next week, and so on, until the end of that month. Since then, he has not returned."

"That may well be!" said the doctor, striking upon the anonymous letter which he had been holding in his hand during the whole interview. "He is dead."

"Is that all?" demanded the Prince.

"Yes, my lord," replied the peasantess, making a very low curtsey.

The Prince stood a moment in deep thought.

"Come," said he, "this woman eludes me still, but God be praised, I have, at least, found my child.

The Prince and the doctor got into the carriage, and immediately drove over to Saint Germain. Joseph Poultier was perfectly well known there, but since the evening previous, he had suddenly left the town with his whole family, and no one knew what had become of him.

This cruel disappointment greatly discouraged the nobleman, It seemed as though some supernatural power took pleasure in surrounding him with illusions only to excite and cherish his regrets. Soon however, after a thousand other fruitless endeavors, the Prince, convinced, at last, of the uselessness of his efforts, considered this event among the number of his youthful recollections, and resigned himself to an utter ignorance with regard to it. Some years after, he thought of it no longer.

Fifteen years passed away. It was then 1750.—At that period, the house which stood at the corner of St. Louis and Grand streets, was inhabited by the family of a laborer. The head of the family, who was a cleaner of the market stalls, seemed to be about fifty years of age. The vigor of his limbs was only equalled by the goodness and gentleness manifested in his countenance. His nature was that of those privileged men, to whom God has given strength only that they may be a safe-guard to the weak, and a terror to the wicked. His name was Joseph Poultier.

Francoise, his wife, who was a fish-woman, was a short, fat, little creature, as are all women, constrained by their business to a sedentary life. Quick, passionate, bawling and headstrong, Mme Poultier was, nevertheless, at bottom, a good-hearted woman.

Two children composed the rest of Joseph Poultier's famil. One of these, Baptiste, a tall, fine-looking young fellow, fashioned after the manner of his father, had been for some time, enlisted in the French Guards, and it did one good to see how gracefully he curled his moustache, and stepped out his foot in marching. The other, Genevieve, was a pretty girl, scarcely aged fifteen.

The house, of which we have spoken, consisted of two stories. In the lower one was a shop in which during market hours, Joseph was accustomed to lock up the baskets of tobse merchants who favored him with their custom. In the evecing, this shop was converted into a bed-chamber for Francoise and her husband, who thus formed the base of the edifice, and the ballast of the house. Above, was Genevieve's chamber; and Baptiste was lodged in the barracks, at the King's expense.

The chamber of Genevieve had a singular aspect, which we must not fail to describe. It was, in reality, a garden. Wherever one turned he could see nothing but flowers; on the mantel-piece, the furniture, the floor, everywhere, there were flowers, and those, too, of the most beautiful kinds. The casement itself was draperied with long red nasturtia which climbed serpent-like, along a net-work, skillfully arranged to support them.

These flowers were, to Genevieve, the object of a perfectly maternal care. She went from one to the other, watering and assiduously inspecting them; and whilst thus employed, her cheeks would become covered with a rosy tinge, so fresh and beautiful that during those moments of ecstacy, which held her silent and motionless, one would have readily taken her for a flower escaped from the bosom of this magnificent bouquet.

One day, on returning from market, the whole family was assembled in the lower chamber for supper. Already was Mme. Poultier, who had, long since, usurped the rule at the domestic hearth, seated in a large arm-chair, and throned majestically between her husband and her child. Joseph, half asleep from fatigue, was nodding on his chair, and threatening, every instant, to let his head fall on his plate. Genevieve on the contrary, drawn up perfectly straight, like a young girl, endeavoring to assume the air of a great lady, was waiting in silence, and casting from time to time, a glance at a bouquet which she wore in her bosom. Suddenly Francoise struck heavily upon the table.

"Come, Poultier," said she, "what are you dreaming about? Do you take my arm for a sign-post?"

A great many sign-posts were, composed of a naked arm, fixed in the wall, and at the end of which was suspended a specimen of the merchandize which it was the intention to expose to the view of the customers: such was then the fashion. Now, during some seconds, Mme. Poultier had been holding ont a plate to her husband."

"And you, Genevieve, have you done with staring at that boquet? You take up a great deal too much time with your flowers, my lady; at your age, I should think it high time, to get at some business."

"I do not wish any thing better, dear mother, answered the young girl."

"That's lucky! Well then, to begin with to-morrow morning, you shall go with me to the fish market. I have asked four and obtained a stall for you, near my own."

"At the fish-market?"

"And why not?"

Genevieve made a grimace so comical, that her father, who was furtively observing her, could not keep from smiling.

"Holy mother! cried Françoise, lifting up her arm to strike her daughter. I really believe that she is ashamed of it!"

Genevieve silently crouched to shun the blow, which was threatening her; but Poultier had already arrested his wife's arm.

"Come, come, Françoise, do not get so angry! To scold here is your privilege, and I will not interfere.....but no blows!"

"Mercy on us! exclaimed the good woman highly exasperated. They are both joining against me: take care, Poultier! you uphold your daughter; you will be the cause of her utter ruin; it is more than time, you should perceive, that she loathes doing anything.

"I willingly will do something; said Genevieve."

"Well, what will you do then?"

"I would like to sell flowers."

At these words the rage of Mme Poultier knew no bounds; her whole body trembled with anger, and her two fat red cheeks swelled out like a pair of furnace bellows.

"Good! cried she;" I would have bet on it! Ah! I see how it is; you are ashamed of your mother's business. The perfume of your flowers has turned your head. But we will provide a cure for that."

Mme. Poultier rose furiously, and rushed out of the room, slamming the door after her. Whether it was that Poultier found that there was already too much odor of fish in the house or that he had been gained over, before hand, by the banquets which Genevieve was in the habit of giving him every evening, certain it was, that he was more favorably disposed towards his daughter than towards his wife. Going to Genevieve, he took her hand and said:

"Dear child! your mother is easily provoked; but she is still a good natured creature; fear nothing; let us only give her time to calm herself; let us go and take a little walk."

Genevieve knew how to nderly she was cherished by her father; this fresh mark of affection touched her deeply; she immediately fell on the old man's neck and kissed both his cheeks.

Their walk was but short; Joseph Poultier, had to rise at day-break, he felt in great need of rest; still he questioned his daughter carefully and seeing that her resolution was firmly taken.

"Well, Genevieve, said he, you shall sell flowers."

When they returned, they found Mme. Poultier already in bed and apparently asleep. Genevieve approached her, sweetly and confidently, in order to embrace her, but Joseph, who knew the proverb, made signs to her not to awake her mother, and sent her to own chamber, after having kissed her on the forehead.

In entering her little room, Genevieve saw a horrid sight.

We have already mentioned the love with which the young girl cultivated those beautiful flowers, of which she had made companions: all had disappeared. Then astartium even, that beautiful red and green curtain which suspended between her and the sun, had been torn down violently; only a few scattered and withered leaves lay on the floor. At this sight the poor young girl almost fainted; her respiration well nigh abandoned her; she remained some moments silent and motionless; at last tears were perceptible in her eyes; others soon followed, and then she fell on her bed exhausted by sobb ing, and drowned in grief.

"Ah! said she, my mother is a wicked woman; I will never see her again."

After this reflection, Genevieve did not say a single word; sitting upon the edge of her bed, with fixed gaze and joined hands, she remained all night, a prey to a kind of stupor. Soon day dawned, and Genevieve heard Joseph and his wife get up to go to their work. The noise arouse her from her revery, and a deep sigh escaped her. At last M. and Mme. Poultier went out. Genevieve then arose made up in a small bundle, her best dresses, went down stairs, and after a short prayer, left her home bidding it an eternal farewell.

The astonishment of Joseph Poultier and his wife, at not finding Genevieve, when they returned, cannot well be expressed, although, for some time they concealed from each other their uneasiness.

At first, they thought it possible, that Genevieve might have gone to one of her friends in the neighborhood, and would probably return before night.—But when they had awaited her for several hours, saw that the street seemed deserted, and heard the shutting of the shop-windows, they were filled with the greatest uneasiness. Joseph was walking to and fro in the room, with sombre looks, crossed arms and head bowed down on his breast. Absorbed in a silent and painful meditation. Francoise was sitting with folded hands in her arm-chair; a fearful silence prevailed around them. At last, Mme. Poultier suddenly arose; a terrible presentiment had entered her bosom; she hastily seized the candle and went to her daughter's room—almost immediately she returned pale and staggering:

"Oh! the unhappy child! she is gone!"

At these words, Joseph stopt wailing, as if he had been struck by a thunder bolt.

"Gone! said he."

"Yes, I have just opened her chest.....all her clothes are gone."

The blow which this news gave him, was so violent, that he required some minutes to recover himself; a thick cloud seemed to pass before his eyes.

"Ah! my God! murmured he at last, what have we done to deserve so much ingratitude!"

Low Postages.

We yesterday announced the fact, from the New York Evening Gazette, that the Assembly of that State, by a nearly unanimous vote, have passed resolutions protesting against any increase of the rates of postage, and requesting the representatives of New York in Congress, to oppose any such alteration of the law. On the preceding day we announced a similar resolution, unanimously passed by the House of Representatives of Ohio.

Is not this proceeding of our sister States an admonition and example to the Legislatures of other States, to take this subject into consideration, and express sentiments, which from their knowledge of the interests and wishes of their constituents, might afford a just indication of the popular will? We do not intimate that the passage of such resolutions by a State Legislature, would be any authoritative instruction to the members of Congress from the State; but, certainly, they would be an indication of popular sentiment, and, as such, would be entitled to consideration and respect.

We admit that Legislative Resolutions by Pennsylvania, even when nearly unanimous, and on deeply important subjects, vitally connected with the interests of Pennsylvania, have had very little influence with the Democracy, as it is misnamed, at Washington. Pennsylvania Democracy, as it is called by some, has most generally been under subserviency to a Southern dictation: and the cardinal interests of our Commonwealth, have been compelled to revolve around the centre of the whims and caprices of party leaders in the South, who have been controlled in their systems of legislation by local prejudices, and very circumscribed sectional interests. But such cases of former ill success, do not supersede the propriety of using all proper exertions on our part, to induce a right state of things.

We regard low postages as required in this country, by a sense of justice, benevolence, and sound wisdom.

In the United States, there is a constant migration from one State or Territory to another, by means of which the members of the same family are very much separated; and fathers, sons, mothers, daughters, brothers, sisters, and friends, who, in earlier life, may have resided in the same vicinity, are now sundered by the distance of hundreds of miles, and have their dwellings in remote forests or valleys. Their hearts yearn towards each other, and the hallowed remembrances of friendship and affection would speak out in words.

A settlement in this manner, of our extended territories, is absolutely required by the soundest dictates of political wisdom; for thereby all the parts of our immense Union are populated by kindred hearts beating towards each other with the fondest sentiments, and the interest of one, is felt to be more nearly than ever the interest of all.—How unwise, unjust, and how contrary to benevolence, is it in Congress to sunder or impede the interchange of these endearing and uniting sensibilities by the imposing of high postages, in other words, by oppressive duties and taxes upon the affections of the heart! We should remember, that in many regions of our country, and in many employments, especially in the occupations of clearing new lands in our territories, the profits of labor are small; and postages very low for wealthy capitalists, are excessively high for the hard hand of the toiling laborer to pay; and if persisted in, must in a great measure, put a stop to the course of the "winged messengers" of family love and friendship, which now ply in many directions.

The injustice of high postages, would also appear by considering the fact, that if a necessity for them be pretended at all, it could arise solely from the misconduct of a partisan administration of the general government, in wasting the receipts from the Post Office, in contracts and other modes designed to conciliate, or reward party friends and adherents. The members of Congress, themselves who advocate high postages, are not careful to avoid an accumulation of needless expense, which if obviated, might be applied beneficially to the establishment of low postages and operate for the general good, without involving the Treasury in any outlay beyond its proper means.

The Burning Skiff.

Last evening about half after nine o'clock, a large crowd of persons passed through the streets of Pittsburgh, dragging a burning skiff, in demonstration of their joy at the election of Dr. Kerr, for Mayor. We have no objection to the manifestation of their pleasure for the success of their candidate, but this mode of showing it, is accompanied with danger to the buildings, more especially in the dry state of the weather that we have had for a long time. We would suggest to them, as fellow-citizens, interested in the general good, whether such signs of exultation should not, on all future occasions, be dispensed with.

Acknowledgment.

We were prevented last night, by lameness, from visiting the several ward polls of the city, to procure returns as early as we desired to have them; but, through the kindness and courtesy of our friend, Col. Bigler, of the Post, we were promptly furnished with copies of his own figures. We have much pleasure in making this acknowledgment of the liberality of our gentlemanly enemy; perhaps, we could have been more hearty, had the record footed up with a balance, where it should have been, on the Whig side. But, "never mind," as the boys say at school, "never mind," we'll have all right next time.

National Internal Improvement.

We trust that part of Gov. Shunk's message relative to the removal of obstructions in the navigation of the Ohio, will receive the early attention of the Legislature, and that they will take occasion from this, to unite upon some effectual plan for urging the necessity of a new certain and expeditious route of communication between the East and the West, in such a manner, also, as to supply facilities of connection with the North and the Lakes.

PHILADELPHIA, Jan. 11, 1846.

Magnetic Telegraph.—The wires on the line of Telegraph between Philadelphia and New York is fully completed, tried and found to work correctly the entire distance between this city and Lambertsville on the New Jersey side of the Delaware, opposite New Hope.

Our market was much depressed yesterday, and but little business of any kind done. Money was in demand, and holders less disposed to part with it unless at advanced rates. Flour declined 6¼ cents per bbl. without sales, and factors were willing to sell at $5,31¼, while others asked $5,37½; 110 cents is pretty freely offered for Pennsylvania red Wheat, without being accepted. Molasses continues dull at 26¼ c ts. Sugar has declined ¼ cent, with a sale of 500 hhds at 5¼@6¼. Good red prime Cloverseed sold at $6.

Stocks were heavy and but little done—prices receding: $20,000 Pennsylvania 6's sold at 67½, a decline of ½ of one per cent; some Wilmington Railroad at 27½; 200 Girard Bank at 8½; 125 Vicksburg at 7½; 20 Northern Bank of Ky. at 92; 50 shares Louisville Bank at 97½; 34 was asked for Texas 8's without buyers; U. S. 6's are held at 108.

NEW ORLEANS, Jan. 3, 1846.

Our market has continued in a very unsatisfactory state since the arrival of the Acadia. Scarcely anything is doing in Cotton, and some days must elapse before business is fairly settled, as holders have no inclination to come down to the terms of the buyers. Yesterday 1400 bales were disposed of, and 200 more at a decline of ⅜@½ cent per lb., which places middling at 6¼ cents per lb.

The Sugar market is lively, and prices are extremely firm. The sales this morning amount to 500 hhds. at prices ranging from 4½ to 6½ cents for extreme qualities. Molasses is in fair request at 21½@21½ cents per gallon.

A sale of 600 bbls. Ohio Flour was made yesterday at $5,75, but purchasers for export decline buying at this price, so that no further transactions have transpired since. St. Louis City Mills is selling at $6,50@$6,75. The Provision market is a complete blank, trade being altogether of a retail character.—Money is rather scarce, say 1 per cent. per month out of doors.

P. S. THREE O'CLOCK—I notice a sale of 3,500 bbls. Flour, for London, at $5,37½.

The Election.

The contest of yesterday, passed off quietly, as usual. We heard of no instance of disorder, and indeed there does not seem to have been sufficient interest felt in the result of the struggle to make it an animated or exciting one.

That the Democratic candidate should have been successful, ought not to surprise anybody; and although it disappoints, it does not greatly surprise us. Many causes combined to defeat Mr. Howard. His police officers, whether with or without good cause it is not necessary now to argue, but certain it is, that they have fallen into disfavor, which has been made to tell with great effect upon Mr. Howard. He had beside, to contend against a strong, but not clamorous discontent, excited by the suppression of information as to the recipients and the manner of distribution of the Relief Fund, which was urgently demanded by the mass of all parties.

It was most unjust to make the Mayor in any degree responsible for the management of this trust, but it is not less apparent to us, that the feeling of resentment occasioned by it, was visited upon Mr. Howard. Again, some of the friends of other aspirants to the Whig nomination, embittered by defeat, have either withheld their votes, or cast them for the Democrat. Dr. Kerr, the Democratic candidate, is a gentleman of unexceptionable character in private life, and only objectionable as a public man, because of his Democratic opinions. There can be no doubt that he received a very large number of Whig votes, as is shown by the vote for Councilmen, of whom a decided majority of Whigs are elected. The vote is very short of a full poll, a fact which cannot in this instance, be ascribed to foul weather, for a finer day never shone upon January. We had "the sun of Austerlitz," but the Democrats seem to have Austerlitz, and we cannot be Napoleon. Dr. Kerr is elected, and that, too, by Whig votes, and nobody is to blame but Whigs.

The following is the vote for Mayor, the poll for Councils was not canvassed at the time of writing this article, but enough is known to render it certain that the Whig candidates are successful in four out of the six wards. This is enough to preserve and secure our ascendency in both branches of the city government.

Polk's Revenue Duties.

Would it not be well for the peculiar friends of President Polk, in the Pennsylvania Legislature, to bring forward and pass some Legislative resolutions at Harrisburg, showing whether they coincide with, or differ from Mr. Polk's notion of a revenue duty? We submit this matter to them, in all seriousness The Democrats in this State, sustained the nomination and advocated the election of Mr. Polk, on the allegation that the interests of Pennsylvania would not be placed in jeopardy by his success. They owe it, now, to their own characters for frankness and good-sense, to say whether or not the revenue duty system of Mr. Polk, is the Pennsylvania system, or whether it is the system of any man or party claiming to be a friend to home industry!

A Climax.

"What are you doing, my son," said a farmer to his son Billy.

"Smoking a sweet fern cigar, father, I made it."

"Throw it away this minute, don't you know that a boy who smokes sweet fern will smoke tobacco, and if he smokes tobacco he will drink rum, and if he drinks rum he will lie, and if he lies, he will steal, and if he steals he will murder and if he murders he will be—acquitted."

This was written for the latitude of New York but it is equally applicable to Pennsylvania.

A British View of the Question.

We are all awaiting with interest, and some with anxiety, advices from Europe furnishing us with the comments of the Press upon the new aspect given to the American pretensions to Oregon. Meanwhile the course and language of the Anglo-American newspaper at New York, The Albion, are not without interest. The subjoined speculations from the last number of that paper, upon the probable motive of Messrs. Adams and Giddings are significant.

From the New York Albion.

We are still without later intelligence from England.

The Oregon question, which carries with it the chances of peace or war, is still the theme which fills every mind and occupies every tongue. The debates in Congress acquire a new, and an intensity of interest daily, and daily the subject seems to become more complex and embarrassing. It is certain that the lull which took place last week, in consequence of the pacific course of Mr. Calhoun, has been disturbed by the warlike speeches of Mr. Adams and others.

On the 5th Mr. Ingersoll, in the House of Representatives, from the Committee of Foreign Relations, brought forward the long expected resolution, for giving the year's notice to Great Britain to terminate the treaty of joint occupancy It was to the following effect:

"Resolved, the Senate concurring, That the President of the United States forthwith cause notice to be given to the Government of Great Britain that the convention between the United States and Great Britian concerning the territory of Oregon, of the 6th of August, 1827, signed at London, shall be annulled and abrogated twelve months after the expiration of the said term of notice, conformably to the 2d article of the said convention of the 6th of August, 1837."

It appears that, in the committee from which this resolution emanated, there was a difference of opinion as to the propriety of its adoption, and, in consequence, Mr. Gilbert Davis, one of the dissentients, appeared with a counter resolution, which he was authorized to make on behalf of the minority. This counter resolution was to the following purport:—

"Resolved, That the question whether a notice to terminate the Convention between the United States of America and Great Britain, of October, 1818, and continued in force by the convention of August, 1827, ought to be given, is not a matter for the decision of Congress; and upon it this House at the present refrains from the expression of any opinion.

Mr. Ingersoll then moved, which he was directed to do by the Committee of Foreign Relations, that the resolution be taken up for consideration on the first Monday in February. On this motion a very interesting debate arose and continued throughout the day, when an adjournment took place. In the course of this day's debate a very remarkable speech was made by Mr. Geddings o. Ohio, in which he announced his change of opinion. On a former occasion, he said, he had been opposed to giving the notice to Great Britain, but since then, the Union had been changed in its essential elements, [by the admission of Texas] and a slave holding oligarchy now holds the entire direction of the government. The southern portion of the Union, be averred, now hold the balance of power in the United States. Under these circumstances, he continued:—

"I am led to the conclusion, to the irresistible conclusion, that war, with all its horrors and its devastation of public morals, is infinitely preferable to a supine inactive submission to the slave-holding power, that is to control this nation, if left in its present situation. I wish to be distinctly understood that I have seen enough of war to form an opinion of its effects, its miseries, and the extent of its curse. Yet sir, I greatly prefer them, for a few years, to the quiet apathy which has already subjected us to a change of the Government founded by our fathers."

"Let no one say that I desire a slave insurrection; but, sir, I doubt not that hundreds of thousands of honest and patriotic hearts will 'laugh at your calamity and mock when your fear cometh.' No, sir; should a servile insurrection take place—should massacre and blood mark the footsteps of those who have for ages been oppressed, my prayer to God shall be that justice—stern, unyielding, and unalterable justice, may be awarded to the master and to the slave."

Other parts of his speech were even more emphatic and startling. Mr. Giddings is one of the party called Abolitionists, who sees in the admission of Texas into the Union, an additional permanency given to the slave system of this country; and he considers this so great an evil that he prefers war to the continuance of peace—as war would break up this slave system or neutralize it, either by a slave insurrection promoted by British invasion, or by the conquest and annexation to the Northern portion of the Union of some of the British Provinces. Such is the purport of his speech as we understand it. In addition to this, it is affirmed by a portion of the press, that the moving cause of Mr. Adams' warlike oration was this same Abolition sentiment, and that he and Mr. Giddings acted with a perfect understanding of each other's views. We know not how far this may be true, but if the supposition be well founded, it follows that the war party has received an accession of strength by the adhesion of the Anti-Slavery portion of the country. Under such circumstances it is difficult to say how matters will terminate.

But the peace party is not idle. Mr. Winthrop of Boston, Mr. Rhett, of South Carolina, Mr. Yancy, of Ala.—have made powerful speeches in favor of moderation, and the resumption of friendly negotiations. The speeches are long, and we regret that we can only give skeletons of them. That the members of the Southern part of the confederacy are ranging themselves under the banner of Mr. Calhoun, is sufficiently apparent; and that Mr. Calhoun is the advocate of peace, is certain. But the strength of the parties has not yet been tested by any decisive vote, and we therefore can give no opinion as to results.

Among many extraordinary things said in Congress, Mr. Owen stated, that when American settlers went over to Oregon, and settled north of the Columbia, they were immediately bought off by the Hudson's Bay Company. One poor man, he averred, was cruelly bought off with $300!! If this could be proved how many would flock thither to endure the like persecution!

The Peace of 1815.

We copied recently an article from the Journal of Commerce, depicting the happiness which the news of peace in 1815, created in that city. The New York Commercial copies the article and says:

We re-produce it to correct one or two errors.

The news of peace was received on Saturday evening, the eleventh of February, 1815, and at an early hour on that evening.

We distinctly recollect the events of that evening, and of the night and day that followed.

It had been our practice for some years to be at the office on Saturday evenings, for the purpose sending off marine and other intelligence that might be received after the paper was put to press in the afternoon, and previous to the closing of the mails for the next morning. On the evening in question we were at the office, with one of the clerks, and at about eight o'clock one of the Hook pilots came into the office in great haste, and almost breathless, saying "There is peace!"—I have brought up the messenger, who is now at the City Hotel."

In a few minutes all the printers' candlesticks were put in requisition, and from the windows of our office, then No. 60, Wall street, we showed as good a blaze of light as, on the spur of the moment, our means would allow.

The office was speedily crowded with visiters, who went forth proclaiming the welcome tidings, and the whole city partook of its general joy.

We ascertained from the pilot that the only newspapers brought by the ship were in possession of the messenger, and on him we waited.—We learned that he had a file of papapers, but that they were intended for Mr. Monroe, the then Secretary of State, and that it required a good deal of entreaty to obtain the loan of them.

We finally prevailed, and took them to the office, and with strict injunctions that they were "not to be cut," and must be returned by five o'clock the next morning.

It was no small task to copy the several columns which were put in type that night—but it was done, and before the appointed hour we returned the papers.

It was now Sunday morning, although it was the Lord's Day, on which we never before worked, and never have since, we believe the state of the public mind required that we should lay before our readers the tidings of which we were in possession.

Our carriers were sent out at an early hour, and we retired to seek a little repose,—instructing the clerks as soon as they got through with the mails to close the office; and if any should call for extras to supply them without charge.

Between seven and eight o'clock, one of the clerks called at our residence to inform us that the crowd was so great at the office that those left in charge did not know what course to take to satisfy them.

We repaired to the office, and with some difficulty found our way into the printing department. The crowd continued until about two o'clock; and in the mean time such was the press for the extras, that all our partitions, in the lower office and on the stairway, from the lower to the third story, were torn down.

It will be remembered that at that time we had no steam presses, nor had we what is known as the "single pull press;" consequently, every sheet required to give a "second pull." From 5 o'clock in the morning until 2 o'clock we worked off about four thousand copies, equal to forty thousand with our present means.

The Iron and Coal Convention at Philadelphia.

A very general attendance of persons connected with the iron and coal trades was an evidence of the importance attached to this convention. The statistical information collected is as yet incomplete, and has been referred to a committee who will collate and perfect the returns from every quarter, to render the tables as complete as possible, and then report both to Congress and our State Legislature.

When the census of 1840 was taken, the product of iron in our State was returned at about 93,000 tons, and 213 furnaces: many then were idle, and those in blast not doing more than half work.—Since that period some 70 or 80 new furnaces have been erected in our State, from 25 to 30 of which are worked by antharacite, and of the largest class. Each furnace employs directly from 100 to 120 laborers, and by a liberal estimate we may presume that near 400,000 persons find employment directly in the iron business of Pennsylvania. It is also estimated that the present year will yield 300,000 tons of pig metal at least, and this, through all the subsequent processes of manufacture, will continue to add to the employment and sustenance of our citizens.

To show the value of the Iron trade, we may remark; that Pennsylvania already produces as much as the whole kingdom of France and more than the Russian Empire. A writer in Redwood Fisher's National Magazine, basing his estimates on the census returns of 1840, when there were reported 804 blast furnaces and 795 rolling mills, forges, slitting mills, &c. in the Union, places the everage annual product at 442,000 tons. This we conceive entirely too small, for every section of country can bear evidance of the carelessness with which these returns were collected. But taking the data of the census and the calculations of the writer and a supposed increase of 30 furnaces, we have the following estimate:

291,600 tons wrought iron, at	$80,		$23,328,000
121,500 " casting	75.		9,112,500
30,000 " blooming iron	50,		1,500,000
443,100			$33,540,500
24,300 increase to this time.
467,000

and which would be as follows:

1840—804 blast furnaces, producing 550 tons to the furnace per annum,	442,000	tons
1845—30 furnaces, mineral and charcoal producing 2000 tons per annum.	60,000	"
	502,000	"
1840—795 rolling and slitting and forges bloomeries, &c.,	213350	tons
1845—5 rolling mills, 20 bloomeries,	of bar, hoop boiler, &c.,.
820

But to throw all the light possible upon this subject, we submit also, the estimate of a writer in the Merchants' Magazine, for March, 1845, who remarks that he had taken much pains to arrive at correct conclusions—

Whole product of the United States in 1845.

540 blast furnaces, yielding 486,000 tons pig iron—an average of 900 tons to the furnace per annum,	486000	tons
950 bloomeries, forges rolling and slitting mills and yielding,	291,600	tons of bar, hoops, &c
Blooms	30,000	tons
Castings, machinery, stove plates &c.	121,500	"

which at their present market value, he estimates would stand thus:

291,600 tons of wrought iron, at $80 per ton.	$23,328,200
121,500 tons of castings, at $75 per ton,	9,112,500
30,000 tons of bloomery iron, at $50 per ton,	1,500,000
	$33,940,500

To which must be added to the quantity imported for the last year:

46,000 tons bar iron, rolled, at $60 per ton	$2,760,000
17,500 tons hammered, at $80 per ton	1,400,000
16,050 tons pig iron, converted into castings, at $75 per ton.	1,950,750
5,750 tons scrap iron, at $35 per ton,	201,950
4,157 tons sheet, hoops, &c. at $1,30 per ton	546,410
2,800 tons steel, at $335 per ton,	938,000
Consumption.	$41,734,610

We are pleased to see that action was taken by this Convention to increase the usefulness of Fisher's Magazine, by giving it increased circulation. It is a truly valuable book of statistics, and takes the true American ground on all our industrial interests.

From a letter laid before the Convention, it appears that a decision of the Secretary of the Treasury in relation to the duties chargeable on galvanized iron sheets has been made, which will greatly prejudice the iron interest, so far as relates to sheet iron of every description. An English house of New York is now importing large quantities of galvanized tin sheets, as they call them, although there is little or no tin used in the preparation, at the nominal duty of 2½ per cent. Galvanized tin sheets are coated with zinc in proportion of one quart of tin to one hundred gills of zinc, dissolved in acid; it is but once immersed at trifling cost, and can be used for all purposes for which sheet iron is used; and even boiler plate may be introduced under the same decision, and it is thought large quantities will be this spring. Duties had been previously paid on this article under protest, and since this decision the amount has been refunded.

The last clause of the fourth section of the Tariff Act of 1842, provides "that all articles not otherwise provided for, shall pay the same rate of duty as if wholly manufactured;" and also, "that no articles manufactured from steel, sheet, rod, hoop, or other kinds of iron, shall pay a less rate of duty, either by weight or value, and a duty of 15 per cent. ad valorum added thereto."

Galvanized sheet iron was but little known when the tariff bill passed, and the above proviso, made to prevent the evasion, is now rendered of no effect by this decision of Mr. Walker—it ought to pay 2½ cents per lb. and 25 per cent. added thereto

The Secretary's letter to the New York Collector gives as a main reason for charging only 2½ per cent, that galvanized tin sheets, a non-enumerated article, is nearer tin plates than any other article, and used for similar purposes. Tin sheets are specially exempt from duty, except the 2½ per cent.: all other articles are to pay the 2½ cents per lb. Galvanized tin sheets are no more the tin sheets of commerce, than a washed copper dollar is a Spanish milled one.

There are other parts of the Tariff which the decision of the Secretary has nullified: for instance, bed screws, among other articles, are to pay henceforward a duty of 30 per cent., while a correct interpretation, and the former practice, would charge them with 2½ cents per lb. and 15 per ct. The raw material of which they are made, viz: ⅜ round rods, pay a duty, of 2½ cents per lb., while the manufactured articles of bed screws pay only 30 per cent. ad valorem, giving the foreign manufacturer an advantage over the domestic, which certainly never was intended by the framers of the law, nor was it so understood by those who first had the execution of it.

As soon as the statistics, now in the hands of the Committees, are prepared for the public, and accessible, we shall lose no time in laying them before our readers. In the mean time, we offer our congratulations to those interested, upon the evidences of zeal which characterized the Convention, and especially upon the formation of a regular Association, which shall be the collector and recipient of that vast quantity of statistics which has been floating about our State and national interests, identified with the protection of Coal and Iron, are fairly stated to the world, it will be a daring act if any one shall be found ruthless enough to attempt their prostration, for the purpose of theorising and experimenting in any free trade doctrines.—Philadelphia North American.

Correspondence of the Baltimore American.

WASHINGTON, Jan'y. 10, 1846.

The Committee on Military Affairs in the House have at length come to a realizing sense of the exposed condition of the city of Baltimore, in case of invasion, and a Bill was this morning reported, appropriating thirty thousand dollars for Sollers' Point.—The Bill was referred and will probably pass. There are provisions in it for the New York harbor and other places, which will add to the number of its friends and aid in securing its passage.

The following are among the items embraced in the Army Bill:—

Fort Washington, Potomac,	26,000
Fort Monroe, Hampton Roads,	35,000

Twenty-ninth Congress.

FIRST SESSION.

From the Baltimore Sun.

WASHINGTON, Jan'y, 10, 1846.

The Senate did not sit to-day.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Mr. Burt, from the military committee reported a bill making appropriations for the construction of certain defensive works in the United States.—The following are the items of the bill.

For the commencement of batteries and works at Sollers' Point Flats below Baltimore, $30.000.

For the purchase from the State of New York of the defensive works on Staten Island $100,000.

For the commencement of a fort at the entrance to Cumberland Sound, Mobile Bay, Alabama $20,000.

The bill was read twice and referred to a committee of the whole.

Mr Holmes, from the naval committee reported a bill to regulate the appointment and promotion of officers of the marine revenue service.

Mr. McConnell complained that the journal did not contain his notice yesterday of a bill to give every white man who would work it, 640 acres of ground for five years. The journal was amended accordingly.

Mr. McDowell introduced a long resolution calling on the committee on naval affairs to procure and report a list of all the vessels above 200 tons in the United States, the price at which they could be purchased, and the propriety of making arrangements to avail ourselves of such vessels for the defence of the country in case of need.

Mr. Hudson rose to a question of privilege. He reminded the House that a short time ago, he had made some remarks relative to the delay of the public printers in printing certain documents. He had also offered resolutions of enquiry as to whether the requisite bonds have been given. In reply to this an article had appeared in the "Union" of an abusive character, and charging him with habitual falsehood, etc. Now he put it to the House whether it would submit to such a state of things. If so, members would soon be dictated by the printers, and every man who might have the independence to complain, would be abused. He was understood not to complain of the fact of the reply in the paper, but that it had been made in so abusive a manner.

Mr. McConnel said that Mr. Ritchie was too honest a man to touch Mr. H. with a 40 feet magnetic pole.

Mr. Garret Davis, in connexion with this subject, offered a resolution to the effect, that J. P. Heiss having abused and charged with falsehood, a member of this house, for words spoken on the floor, the said Heiss be discharged as one of the printers of the House.

After some discussion on points of order, Mr. Davis got the floor again upon his resolution.—He was proceeding to speak of the audacity of Mr. Heiss, when Mr. McConnel called him to order, and intimated that Mr. D., in undertaking to help Mr. Hudson, was doing "dirty work with dirty hands," or words to that effect.

Mr. Davis said "he had nothing to say to a dirty blackguard."

Mr. McConnel said something by way of rejoinder, but owing to the noise and confusion, he could not be heard.

Mr. Davis begged pardon of the Speaker and of the House for his hasty expression.

Here another dispute arose as to whether the resolution was relavant to the privileged question. The House by a vote of 113 to 57 declared that it was.

Mr. Bayley then made a speech against the resolution, and closed by moving to lay it on the table. The motion prevailed, yeas 101, nays 85.

The house then went into committee of the whole and resumed the consideration of the joint resolution reported from the committee on foreign affairs, giving the Oregon notice to Great Britain.

Mr. R. M. T. Hunter having the floor made an eloquent and flowry speech against giving the notice. He took the ground that the only way to secure the whole of Oregon, would be to refrain from giving the notice. He showed that if we should go to war with England about Oregon, we could never get it until we had destroyed every vestige of British power on every land and on every sea.

Mr. Kennedy, of Indiana, followed. He went for the whole of Oregon, and told the committee how the Western men got their education by exercising their talents in combatting with the Red Skins and the Bears. Nearly all who had spoken had agreed that the whole of Oregon was ours.

Then, he would say, if the whole of Oregon was ours, it was a burning, withering and blasting shame that the Cross of St. George should be allowed to wave over any part of it. He repudiated the idea of our refusing to give the notice, and of sneaking into Oregon and populating it, when as it was our own property we ought to go openly and manfully to work.—He went on to tell that he is of a Quaker family, that war hating sect, but that notwithstanding this, he would rather fight than suffer dishonor.

When he concluded, the committee rose.

OFFICE OF THE GLOBE UNION AGENCY.—A public Treasurer Wanted.—A man is wanted to assume the responsibilities and perform the duties of a public Treasurer. He will have to take charge of the revenues of the Agency in particular, and of all moneys that may be deposited by the public in general. The Treasury will be opened in the city of Louisville, and will necessarily have at least three branches in each State, and will sustain a direct relationship with public Treasuries in various other nations. The Board of Directors that will be provided for the purpose, will be found fully competent to direct the operation of the Treasury in a manner that cannot fail to procure public confidence.

Applications for this highly important and profitable situation will be received from all parts of the remote States. The man who furnishes the largest amount of personal security will be appointed with the salary that a majority of the Directors may agree upon.

Applications (post paid) addressed to the Directors of the Globe Union Agency, will be received until the 1st day of March, and will then be decided upon by an impartial committee appointed for the purpose.

The Original, only true, and genuine Pill.

FINDLAY TOWNSHIP, Allegheny Co. July 23d, 1838.

Messrs Shinn & Sellers—I feel it a duty I owe to the public and the standing of your celebrated Pills, to testify to the good effects produced by them in my own case. In the fall of 1837, I was attacked severely with the Chronic Liver Complaint, and had prostrated all my physical power. I applied to Dr. ——, of Clinton, for medical advice, and although he essayed every thing in his power to mitigate my disease, yet I must honestly say, that I received no permanent relief under his treatment. At this time I considered my case hopeless, when seeing your Liver Pills advertised, I, after a good deal of hesitation, (being urged to try them by my neighbors,) purchased two boxes, and before I had used one whole box, the pain in my side and shoulders, produced by a diseased Liver, was speedily removed. I continued using the Pills at intervals, upon every return of my symptoms, with invariable success. It is my opinion that the Liver Pills will not fail to cure, when the directions are strictly followed. You are at liberty to make any use of the above that you may think proper. I remain your grateful friend,

SAMUEL P. MORRISON.

N. B. The Liver Pills are much relied upon in bilious attacks in my immediate neighborhood.

RIVER MATTERS.

☞ Last evening at dark there were six feet water in the channel and falling. The weather was cold, and ice was making fast.

☞ The steamer Oregon, Capt. Smith, arrived at Louisville from New Orleans on the 8th and was advertised to leave for the same port on the 10th.

☞ The Cincinnati Times of Saturday afternoon says—About 3 o'clock yesterday afternoon the steamboat Wave, lying at the landing, laden for departure, was badly crushed between two large boats in consequence of the upper one being struck by a very heavy mass of ice. Her cabins were a good deal broken, her wheel houses stove in, and her machinery somewhat injured. The damage is estimated at $200 to $300.

Imports by the River.

WHEELING—Per Belmont: 15 kgs and 9 bbls butter, 1 bbl tallow, 1 sk feathers, 93 bbls clover seed, 1 sk rags, 89 kgs and 30 bbls lard, 2 cases Jeans, 1930 ps blk pork, 127 Jowls, 3 bbls flax seed, 93 reams paper.

Banks in the Union.

We copy from the New York Herald, the annexed statement of the condition of banks throughout the Union, as compiled by that paper, from returns received at the Treasury Department in Washington. It is a statement of much interest to the inquiring.

Official returns have been received at the Treasury Department, from the banks of nearly every State and Territory. The annexed table contains the reports of the banks of each State and Territory, showing the movement at the different dates given. It is almost impossible to make up a full statement, showing the condition of all the banks in the country. So many banking systems have exploded, and the banks of some of the States are in such a wretched condition, that no reports, in any shape, can be obtained from them. It will be perceived that several of the reports included in the annexed table, are of rather an old date, but they were without doubt the latest received at the Treasury Department, previous to making the full statement. These statements will soon be presented to Congress, for the purpose, undoubtedly, of furnishing some data for the regulation of that body, in legislating upon the financial policy of the government.

The movement in 1845 differed very materially from that in 1841, or any of the previous years. The changes in the different departments have not been uniform, but they have been of a very satisfactory and desirable nature, as they have strengthened the banks and placed them in a much better condition. The currency of the country is in fact sounder and more valuable than it has been at any time within the past fifteen years, at least. There has been an expansion since 1843 and 1844 of about sixty millions of dollars in loans and discounts, and about twelve millions in circulation; but this expansion has not in our estimation been greater in proportion than the legitimate business of the country, or more rapid than was required to keep pace with the increasing demand from the actual channels of trade. If the banks in this country continue to pursue the course they for the past two years have pursued, it will be many years before we reach an expansion so great as that experienced in 1836, which led to the revulsion in 1837 and 1839.

Thorn's Yeast Powders.

FOR arising buckwheat, flannel and other cakes.—These Powders are an admirable substitute for yeast, in making all kinds of batter cakes and bread, that do not require much kneading, and have the advantage over that article in making the latter perfectly light and ready for baking the instant they are mixed. Buckwheat and other cakes, when made with these powders, are less likely to disagree with the stomach than those made with yeast, are entirely free from any bitter or unpleasant taste; and as it requires but a few minutes to prepare for baking, the possibility of ever having them sour is avoided. They are used by many respectable families and physicians in the city, and highly approved of. I therefore confidently recommend them to the general use of families and hotel keepers, as being greatly superior to yeast, beside economizing of time and trouble. Prepared and sold by WILLIAM THORN,

Valuable Real Estate for Sale.

THE undersigned will dispose of the following valuable Real Estate, viz—
THIRTY ACRES OF GROUND, having an extensive front on the South bank of the Monongahela, (our principal business street,) between all the Steamers in, and where the heavy business of the City is done,) being the West end of the Borough of Birmingham, laid out into 230 lots of 24 by 100 feet, for Residences, and 96 by 390 feet for Manufacturing purposes, on 50 feet streets, and extending back to 20 feet alleys.
TEN ACRES similarly situated and laid out, adjoining the East end of Birmingham.
THIRTY ACRES OF COAL HILL LOTS, running from near the Bridge toward Birmingham, fronting on the two Turnpikes.
These are well known as the most advantageous locations about Pittsburgh, or in the world, for Manufacturing, unexceptionable views of the City and the finest and best quality, at hand, and furnished much cheaper than any other place about the City, and being nearly opposite the City Steamboat landing.
For Residences, also, there are no more beautiful, healthy, and convenient locations for those engaged in business in the City; but a few minutes ride or walk from the beautiful new Wire Suspension Bridge; some of the sites commanding fine views of the two Cities, three rivers and surrounding country.
We would prefer to selling, that Capitalists would join us in the erection of manufactories and other improvements. There is a stratum of Coal beneath the surface of 12 to 15 feet in thickness. A large body of the ground also is of Brick loam, and valuable for making Brick. It being a portion of an undivided estate for the past forty years, has thus been kept out of the market. Could the yearly applications to purchase have been accepted, it would long since have all been sold and compactly built up. It will be sold at less than other property as near the City in other directions, (and we particularly invite those interested to compare the prices,) notwithstanding its superior advantages, and must rapidly increase in value beyond other property, as every one can see from its great resources and advantageous location, presenting an object of the most certain and lucrative investment, for manufacturing the most advantageous, and for residences the most desirable, all of which is more fully set forth and confirmed, as well as other general information in regard to it and our city, in a pamphlet issued by us, and to be had of Booksellers in this and Eastern cities. If not disposed of previously, it will be sold either in whole or in part of either one of the plots, on Monday, the 25th day of May next, at 10 o'clock, A. M. Terms moderate. O. OLMSHY GREGG,
ISAAC GREGG,
MOSES F. EATON.
